High, high up in the Sierra Madre, there are obscure mountain villages. Tiny clusters of humanity eke out a living raising their crops and live stock there. They live in a world detached from current events, television and the telephone; isolated, unknown and seemingly unimportant to the rest of civilization. But God, who sees all, knows all, and cares about all, has placed his burden for these lost souls deep into the heart of Juan Casa an Apostle to the Mountains of Mexico.

Our mission team had no idea of the adventure in store for them! Loaded into a 15 passenger van, we drove through the dusty desert outside of Saltillo, Mexico. We turned off the beaten path into an Adobe village which at first appeared to be a ghost town. We stopped to make a pit stop borrowing a local privy before the climb. Juan guided us to a narrow dirt path that would take us up the side of the mountain. We climbed and twisted and turned and climbed and turned and twisted. There was only one lane, no guard rails and no room for error. Some of our passengers were TERRIFIED! We climbed some 12,000 feet, over two miles straight up. We reached the top and there, nestled in the clouds across a parched pasture, was the little village of San Jose de la Joya, inhabited by some two hundred folks.

Pastor Roberto invited us into his home for a humble meal of greasy eggs, tortillas & beans. We then went out house to house inviting the people of the village to come and hear testimonies & the word of God. They came, and God moved on the hearts of many. This little Church that Juan Casa has been instrumental in helping to plant and nurture is just one of many into which he will be carrying Vida International, our video Bible school. Thank you for making it possible to take the gospel to remote places.

Together we touch the world!
